Growing Together: Nurturing Girls and Women's Wellbeing for a Thriving and Resilient Mbeligi Community

Summary Report

Hosted by Mme Fawah Ngeniform Akwo, Founder of the Awahsa'a Ngeniform Foundation, this three-session webinar event via Zoom on September 21, 2024 brought together Mbeligi (Bambili) natives and affiliates in Cameroon, the United States, and Italy to explore strategies for fostering a thriving and resilient Mbeligi community, with a focus on nurturing and leveraging women and girls' human capital.

The webinar was attended by an estimated 60 unique persons, with 28-30 persons connecting per session. Over 80% of webinar participants were women, about 25% of these connecting from Bambili or elsewhere in Cameroon. 38 persons – the majority of whom were women (over 95%)—responded to a pre-event survey and conveyed a strong desire to address critical issues facing the Mbeligi community. Their expressed topics of interest included: healthy living, STD prevention and care, chronic disease reversal, diabetes management, parenting teenagers, mental wellbeing, the impact of digital technology on daily lives, STEM education in Cameroon, strengthening education systems, ensuring affordable education for all children, (Mbeligi) language preservation, and community empowerment. Over a third of respondents ranged between the ages of 23 and 38, and another third between the ages of 39 and 54. Some 14% of respondents said they were between the ages of 55 and 73, and about 9% under 22 years. Men constituted about 17% of the webinar panelists, and likewise as a percentage of combined participants.

Key Takeaways

- 1. Holistic Wellbeing: Discussions emphasized the need for balance across various aspects of life to achieve overall well-being. Digital tools were discussed as a means to promote health and well-being, especially in challenging times for accessing public services. “Prevention is the best health practice,” emphasized Dr. Ngwashi. The importance of community support in identifying and addressing challenges was also stressed. “The work of self introspection is a priority,” said Mme Dyllis Minang, highlighting personal responsibility in conjunction to plural efforts. Preventing and addressing gender-based violence (GBV) was a critical focus, with recommendations to address cultural factors and social norms that contribute to violence, to be sensitive to and practice zero tolerance to abusive environments—especially in the privacy of the home, to seek resources and support, including online, and to leave abusive situations before it is too late. Highlighting the complexities attached to adequately responding to GBV, Ms. Shella E. Fon noted: “Leaving only isn’t enough, ensuring resources are in place ensures safety [of GBV survivors and affected persons].”
- 2. Education & Economic Opportunities: Participants highlighted the critical role of education in empowering women and girls, and likewise creating pathways for economic opportunities that benefit the whole community. Community-based initiatives like self-help groups (“njangi”), credit unions, agricultural cooperatives, etc. were lauded for their impact in providing financial assistance and mentoring for skills training and business ventures. Challenges identified in the way of education and economic opportunities for the Mbeligi community included:

● The Awahsa'a Ngeniform Foundation

- a. Lack of awareness about available resources
- b. Limited access to funding and mentoring for small businesses
- c. Gender inequalities in the workforce

In starting to look towards addressing these challenges, Ms. Shella E. Fon emphasized the importance of leveling information asymmetries through community resource mapping, noting: "Asset mapping is crucial. It's about recognizing the strengths, skills and resources already present within our community. By connecting those assets to needs, we can create a powerful force for change."

3. Internet Technologies and Community Action: Panelists shared how Internet technologies including social media are extending the impact of their work, enabling for example:
- a. Increased communication and outreach. "We can now communicate with our parishioners beyond the notice board," Fr. Kenneth Akua commented on how leveraging social media for evangelization and religious-based support on social issues has increased the Catholic Church's reach into the community.
  - b. Decentralization of services and opportunities. "Mynkwa app promotes the financial independence of young women thereby reducing environments that foster GBV and promiscuity [related to the spread of STDs]," Ms. Limunga Elna outlined some advantages of fintech in fostering mobile savings and promoting financial literacy in youth.
  - c. Collaboration and freelance opportunities. Ms. Fofung and Mr. Nfor both emphasized how Internet tools, including digital tools for managing video media, as well as editorial and meeting tools, have greatly facilitated the ability to collaborate across boundaries, access resources online, and significantly increase productivity for enterprise.

The session also identified challenges in accessing Internet technology for girls and women, including lack of access to reliable internet connectivity, inability to afford devices, cultural barriers, and safety concerns. "Women by virtue of their presence on social media platforms have been targets of abuse” a participant lamented, highlighting the need for concerted policy and community action to minimize the risks of Internet platforms.

Recommended Next Steps

- Develop strategies to leverage digital tools for education taking into consideration differentiated needs of the Mbeligi community.
- Identify and connect survivors with relevant resources for safety and recovery from GBV.
- Address social norms and cultural practices that contribute to violence and promote healthy relationships.
- Promote education and awareness about mental health and access to counseling services.
- Develop programs and initiatives to improve digital literacy skills among girls and women.
- Educate young girls and women about safe and responsible Internet use.
- Create a platform (series) for networking of Mbeligi women.

The webinar underscored the need for a collective effort to empower women and foster a thriving community, highlighting the vital role of education, technology, and community actions.
